

David Aubin, Astronomical tables as work, 16th-18th centuries

Abstract: Astronomical tables often embodied a massive amount of work. Whether celebrated or hidden, the work that went into compiling or computing astronomical tables will be investigated in this talk. We first review various conceptions of work in history. We then examine the way table making was conceived as work practice. We finally turn to considerations of table making as collective work that has to be organized.